New Orleans Money Market.
The New Orleans Picayune, of April 17th, says:
The money market has given some indications of returning ease-to-day, and borrowers for the time appear to be perfectly satisfied. Offerings of paper at most of the banks exhibited a considerable diminution when compared with previous reports, and the editor's usual judgment indicated a material reduction of the pressure which had existed without interruption for several

VIGOR is one of the cardinal elements of fitness; it is the consequence of its decline, disease, after paralytication. The best means of imparting to the broken down frame and shattered soul, which has yet been irretrievably disengaged, is probably the feeling of health-sense and oil-sense in the celebrated Balsamic Bitter. Many who reflect with sympathy with which they have tried with their youth and maturity, fancy that they have gone to be restored. This is a delusion. Pending,
